A few weeks ago Miss Abbie Taylor returned to Newport from New York, where she had gone to bury her aunt, whom she had tenderly cared for at her home in the former city. She returned from New York on Thursday, May 11, and a few hours afterward she was stricken with pneumonia and died May 13. A few hours before her death, says a correspondent of the New York Herald, the attending physician sounded her lungs and told her that there was no hope of her recovering. The doctor, when he was leaving, stated that he would return at eight o'clock in the even-

At half-past seven o'clock she resee that there is no hope. I will surely Y. Independent. die. Hand me paper, pen, and ink. I will write the names and addresses of those whom I desire to be acquainted with my decease, and when I am dead I desire that they be forwarded." She then called for the keys to the drawer containing her papers, money, etc., and counted the money in a business-like manner. The deceased lady had always expressed a desire to retain possession of her senses before she died, and was determined to use her pen, as she wanted to write the announcement wish was fulfitled to the letter, and she breathed her last just after she had performed the final act of her life. Her face and hands were cold in death, and she knew that the end was at hand. She then quietly laid down the pen, and with a smile, recognized the grim messenger of death.

A sad romance in connection with the deceased lady was brought to light this evening, which in a great measure shows the constancy and devotion of woman. Miss Taylor was reared in luxury in New York, and was brought up as a gentlewoman in every sense of the term. Forty years ago she accidentally met John C. Phillips, a noble specimen of a man, who was poor and who followed the sea for a living. The acquaintance soon ripened into love, and in due time the engagement ring was placed upon her finger by young Phillips, who was in command of a ship. Their vows were plighted, and the hopeful couple looked forward to a happy union. The gallant skipper, on a return voyage, was taken ill, and was brought to Newport, where his relatives resided. The disease proved to be consumption, and for weeks and months he vainly struggled against the decree of fate. The young lady whom he had promised to marry left her home of luxury and ease, and, against the advice of those who were dear to her by the ties of kindred, hastened to his bedside.

Here she remained, waiting on him for many weary months and doing all that was possible to comfort and console him. She watched, hoped, and prayed for him, but the seeds of the disease were too firmly rooted, and, after a long and weary struggle, the spirit of her lover departed. The blow came with peculiar sadness. months she was in a critical condition. She did not return to her home, but reest hopes had been blighted, in order that she might daily strew his grave the marble which marked his last resting-place.
For fifteen years after the death of Captain Phillips she lovingly and ten-derly showed her devotion to the dead by personally nursing an invalid sister of her dead lover. She devoted the remainder of her life to the welfare of others, and daily proved herself afriend to the poor and unfortunate of the city, in which he had not a single relative. She worked in the "Master's vineyard" in that quiet manner which is so peculiar to those who are in earnest and who have a mission to perform. Strange as it may seem, she was not known outside of the section of the town where she resided. She kept herself aloof from all social festivities, simply attending service at the Episcopal Chapel, which was built for those who could not afford to worship elsewhere, it being a branch of Trinity Church. It was among this class that she preferred to labor, for in addition to the consciousness of doing good she had the associations of her lover ever about her, and she never manifested a desire to reside in any other part of the city.

Her funeral was largely attended by those whom she had befriended, and her remains, when taken to the silent Here, in sight of the spot where he had died, she lived for upward of forty years, and it was fitting that in death she should occupy the place which had been reserved for her, and where she longed to lay her weary heart.

All He Knew.

At the Union Depot the other day an old man who had borrowed a match, then a chew of tobacco, then a postage stamp, and lastly besought the loan of a key to open his old sachel, came back the fifth time and said to the stranger whom he had most annoyed:

"My friend, can you tell me how many times the human heart beats per minute?"

" No, sir!" "Can you tell me who first discovered the circulation of the blood!"

" No. sir!" "Do you know whether the pulse

-Potato-growing has been the object of a curious experiment just completed in England. A pound of early potatoes was taken and allowed to spirt (sprout) freely. From each potato a spirt was broken, and potatoes and spirts were then planted in separate rows. Both grew well, and the following is the result of the experiment: From the spirts, which weighed in all half an ounce, five pounds five ounces of sound potatoes have been obtained, and from the pound of potatoes five pounds four ounces, showing a slight balance in favor of the spirts. The spirt potatoes were the more regular in shape, the earlier in growth .- Chicago Tribune.

After reafew rods of the place where her fond- viewing the work of others in this branch of analytical research, and enumerating the adulterants, organic with flowers and drop a silent tear on | and inorganic, detected, to wit: Glucose, potato and other starches, flour, dextrine, vegetable albumen, blood, fragments of sugar cane, woody fiber, sporules and filaments of fungi, acarus sacchari or sugar mite, sand, particles of stone and grit, chalk, marble-dust, pine clay, terra alba, gypsum, plaster of paris, bone dust, lead, iron, lime, chloride of lime, common salt, etc. Prof. Chandler and Mr. Colby show that the sugars now in the market are generally free from this long list of insoluble and mineral matters alleged to be used in former times, and that, owing to the improvements in the processes of refining and purification and the absence of raw-sugars from the retail trade, most of the organic impurities previously detected are now removed, and that the sugar mite is seldom seen.

The sugars of to-day are, however, subject to adulteration by the addition of starch or grape sugar to the cane sugar, and by the bleaching of the brown sugars by the use of tin salts. One hundred and seven carefully-selected samples of sugar procured in New York City showed results as follows: Thirty-one were microscopically clean, forty-eight slightly contaminated with dust, twenty-two contained considerable dirt, and six were very dirty. city of the dead, were laid by the side of him whom she had loved and for whom she had left home and friends. Forty-one samples of white sugar were all found to be pure, and in the sixty-six samples of brown sugars, three were adulterated to a very large extent with glucose, and four showed the presence

The method of examination for determining the presence and quantity o artificial grape or starch sugar in cansugar is that known as the hot polarization methods, devised by Drs. Chan dler and Richetts, depending upon the following well-known facts, some o them probably quite new to most read

1. Dextrose, under the conditions of analysis, exerts a constant effect upor the plane of polarized light at all tem peratures under 100 deg. C.

2. Levulose. The action of levulos is not constant, the amount of rotatio to the left being diminished as the tem perature increased.

3. "Invert" sugar, being a mixture of one-half dextrose and one-half levu lose, does hot effect the plane of polar ized light at a certain temperature some where near 90 deg. C.

4. Cane sugar, when acted on b dilute acids, is converted into "inver human system is the fact that if you sugar," while dextrose is practically unaltered.

Lungs, Liver and Kidneys These great organs of life, as is known to every one, are most intimately related to each other, and where one is caused to suffer, the other two, on account of their sympathetic connection, are unavoidably made to feel the evil effects. Therefore, when distressed with symptoms of diseases incidental to either organ, a medicine that will give tone and strength to all three, is Nature's best assistant in restoring health. Such virtues are beneficial as are contained in Yellow Dock, Sarsaparilla, Juniper, Iron, Buchu, Celery, and Calisaya. All these ingredients are scientifically combined in that great health renewer, Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Ask you druggist to get it for you.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Caills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimeny to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a per-fect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.
